the American market, and be the means of opening a reciprocal and profitable trade with the United States. The man who is a good gentleman, it is for the advantage of the Maritime Provinces, including a part of Quebec, which is also largely interested in the ratification of the Treaty as it is ratified, and that this great country is opposed to them, on what ground should we deprive them of the right?

The American fishermen were opposed to the ratification of the Treaty, and were going into the United States Government against its ratification, and although the Government knew they were not making any money out of it, they were determined they desired to meet its face to face, hand to hand, and head to head, and have an amicable settlement of all disputes.

Reference to the navigation of the St. Lawrence, Her Majesty's Government was not responsible for dealing with that subject. It was a matter over which we had no voice. But the navigation of a small piece of water in no way affect the interests of the Empire. A refusal to grant and frequenting the navigation of the St. Lawrence.

The discussion upon Mr. Cartwright's motion in relation to the withdrawal of the claims on Monday was an animated one, and occurred in the presence of the tire day. Mr. Harrison's amendment to the effect that the interests of the Dominion should not be promoted nor the relations of the Dominion to the United States strengthened by such a motion.

Mr. Blake's amendment to the amendment was nothing more nor less than that the Government should not be asked to—language used by the Government in urging the British Government to support the United States a settlement of the claims on the basis of the Alabama—that it should have received such a small sum. There certainly could be no harm in Mr. Blake's language used by our own Government in this connection. The Government, strong and emphatic in its position.

The following is the amendment:

That the House concur with the view expressed by the Government in the statement of the subject of the Panama raised in the House on the 10th day of April, 1876, in the following words:—The Court of Claims in the
